

Jewish Burials in Devonshire Street Cemetery

Devonshire St Cemetery was located between Eddy Ave, Elizabeth, Chalmers and Devonshire Streets, Sydney. It was consecrated in 1820. The Jewish section was used from 1832. By 1860 the cemetery was full, and it was closed in 1867.

In 1901 the cemetery was resumed to allow for the development of Central Railway Station. Representatives of those buried in the cemetery were given 2 months to arrange for exhumation and removal of remains from the cemetery. All reasonable costs were to be borne by the Government.

The list below details those persons whose remains were transferred from the Jewish section to other cemeteries. The cemetery to which the remains and headstone were moved is also shown, together with details of the applicant for the removal. The list also contains names of persons who are known, from newspaper notices, to have been buried in the cemetery up to 1844, but in respect of whom no application for removal may have been made.

The information comes from a number of lists held by the Society, as well as from the work by Johnson and Sainty, detailed below. There were some inconsistencies in the lists used. Notes and alternate spelling of names have been included where it has been thought necessary.

Approximately 100 headstones which were relocated to Rookwood still exist in the Old Ground. About 30 of the 140 transferred to Eastern Suburbs Memorial Park, known at the time as Bunnerong or La Perouse cemetery, still exist in their Pioneer Park. These can be found via the search screens of each cemetery.

"Devonshire Street Cemetery re-interment register and index" ("microform" format) was produced by the Library of Australian History, North Sydney, 1999. However that document has not been consulted. A copy is held by the State Library of New South Wales.

Other publications covering transfers from the cemetery include:--
